Letters for August 29, 2005

Dear Editor:

It is about time someone proposes a logical solution to the impending Social Security crisis. This is why I would like to thank our congressmen for their work in championing meaningful Social Security reform by pushing for the establishment of personal retirement accounts. These individually controlled accounts would give American workers control over their own retirement and allow them to build their own "nest egg" as opposed to watching their benefits go down the drain.

There are many people out there who think we should do nothing to the current system that has been around for the past 70 years. I say to them: Times change, and if we don't change with them, we are destined for disaster. Social Security is in desperate need of reform and we should be grateful to our representatives in Congress for taking a stand and proposing a plausible solution.
