Reform and strengthen Social Security

It was a milestone worth celebrating when Social Security recently marked its 70th birthday. It has been a great social program, but unless it is reformed, it is also a program in serious danger. Our children and our grandchildren deserve the same retirement security that retirees have received since the inception of the Social Security program.

It's clear Congress must bring about reform that makes the system solvent, includes the opportunity to invest Social Security taxes in a voluntary personal retirement account and protects the benefits of seniors -- without increasing taxes.

Our congressional delegation needs to hear from constituents that they must make sure Social Security is around -- and solvent -- for another 70 years and beyond.
